The Content of the British American War

There are two symbolized flags in the picture. The movement of American soldiers portrayed the protection of the land. The pointing direction of the American leader is upward, which is opposite to the British leader. The composition of the British soldiers is trying to take over the position of the American soldiers. In the pictures, we can see the chaotic moment that the people who have the same race are fighting each other. Civilians are fighting each other with the British Army. From history, we know that the English government surpassed the American people, and the American people are trying to overthrow the government. This war was one of the most significant controversial moments and a sign of American society and people's liberty.

The blue color means peace as the sea. However, the red color might refer to love, but it also means hatred of its people. It also means the strain of blood from the war that both sides of soldiers are going through. Americans are waving the flag because they are fighting for liberty, and people surpassed by the government and the British King. The war was ongoing for an extended period and the time of the American revolutions. Everything was going down, and the British government still does not care much about people in the states. They kept the people in fear and had taxes for people. The people with the same ethnicity are fighting for the cause of surviving. It was toxin and unfair for people who discover the tyranny in the government. American people and civilians are fighting for liberty from an unjust kingdom that does not care about its people. It seemed like the British government is trying to push the colonial down due to the benefit and product they got from the American community.
